

Notes to Grandchildren: A Treasure to Cherish

In being a grandparent, all of us are given a second opportunity in tending to the young minds that enter our lives. Parenting, though so common and ubiquitous, is hardly followed as an easy recipe. Parenting calls for a deep awareness about the vulnerabilities of our young ones, keen observation about the ongoing development of their minds and bodies, their strengths and shortcomings, their unlimited potentials. It calls for being there for them not only when they achieve their milestones, accomplishments but also when they fall, injure, have a setback or facing their share of life's challenges. The Mind Gardener Dr. Varada Divgi, MD (a Pediatric Consultant by profession now retired after over forty years of service) has compiled quotations from generations past around numerous qualities she would like foster and nurture in all of our minds, particularly in young minds. She has presented them as a Thought Seed, one for each day of the year. Here she has noted her reflections, encounters, lessons learned on her journey of personal and professional life.
